

I have given up on any price going down by I do resent wasting my money on channels I DO NOT want and DO NOT watch. Different bundling options, or better yet, ala carte offerings would be wonderful. Yes prices are high, and probably will remain so. However, if the consumer was offered the opportunity to pay for exactly what they wanted in programming, there probably would be a lot less grumbling about cost. Each and every penny is hard earned and to waste it by being told what channels of the company's choosing you will receive, only causes further resent at the cost and the company. You don't go to the grocery store and be told that in order to buy the milk, you must also buy the eggs. I know of no other business that makes the choices for the consumer.